My trip to Ghana to teach children in primary school was really valuable. This trip was completely outside my comfort zone, but I am really glad that through Crossing Borders, I decided to do this. Ghana offers a culture and customs that are a major difference from the Dutch culture and it was fascinating to experience it all.

Living with other volunteers from different countries, such as Germany, France, the US and the United Kingdom, was also really nice and we celebrated a few holidays together: Thanksgiving, Sinterklaas and Christmas.

Because there was no school during the Christmas break, I was able to travel around the country with a few other volunteers. Ghana is very diverse: from going on a safari in the north, to surfing on the coast and experiencing colonial history, it is all possible! I would definitely recommend traveling around to experience different parts of the country, as Ghana is quite big.

Overall, spending over three months in Ghana was an amazing experience!
