

As part of Crossing Borders I went to Malta to work on the sustainable development goal of 'quality of education'. Together with another classmate, I did an internship at an international school with primary and secondary students. The work I carried out consisted of giving PE lessons, guiding students during outings and replacing absent teachers during classes, which I enjoyed very much.

Another organization we were in contact with, mainly helped with practical issues. They are a sister organization of the school, named Future focus. With help of this organization, we arranged practical issues, such as the accommodation to stay at during the internship and transfer from and to the airport.

During my stay I enjoyed exploring the islands of Malta and discovered incredible places! This consisted of both diverse restaurants, cultural places and nature sceneries. I learned a lot about Malta's history and know much more about their culture now.

Crossing borders helped me with getting to know myself and my ambitions better.

Next to that, it really contributed to discovering a new culture and learning all kinds of skills in a different way than by following a regular course. I really recommend following crossing borders if you are looking for a great adventure.
