Should we ban violence against robots?

In my paper, I would like to consider the possibility of banning violence against robots. I will present the thesis that we should regulate this issue as soon as possible, independently from the possibility of gaining the moral status of robots. Even today, people feel empathy for. I will try to protect the thesis that it should be prohibited by law to destroy robots publicly (with animal-like or human-like interface). The value protected by such provisions are not robots as such, but the public order. Nowadays, in some countries, it is forbidden to use bad language publicly or littering in the public sphere. At the same time, we could do it in our houses - swearing and have a mess in the room. We want to have a public sphere free from anti-social patterns. Violence against robots should be classified as such behavior. If such violence is possible in the public sphere, it will symbolically represent also an acceptance for violence against humans and animals.
