Emotions 2019

Emotions and emotion regulation are key factors in the adjustment to the demands of daily life and taxing life events. Consequently, they are major determinants of our quality of life and well-being. In addition, both psychopathologies and physical health are influenced by emotion regulation processes.

This three-day-conference will offer a broad variety of research on how adequate and inadequate emotion regulation impact on mental and physical functioning. As in the previous conferences in this series, Emotions 2019 will include cutting-edge fundamental research, novel research methodologies, and clinically oriented studies.

We welcome researchers interested in fundamental emotion research as well as investigators with a background in psychiatry, psychosomatics, health or clinical psychology, developmental psychology, social psychology, or behavioral medicine.

The program includes keynote lectures featuring international experts in the field, workshops, demonstrations of novel measurement techniques, symposia, and poster sessions.

As ever before, the organizers attach much value to a pleasant atmosphere and ample opportunities for informal contact and exchange.

We cordially invite you to submit your proposals for symposia, workshops, or single (oral or poster) contributions.
